BUSH: SUPREME COURT APPOINTMENTS DRAW SUPPORT;
DEFICIT SPENDING, HEALTH CARE POLICIES & IRAQ EXIT STRATEGY
HEAVILY CRITICIZED

Phoenix, Arizona, January 27, 2006. President George W. Bush's job ratings in Arizona have improved slightly (40%) since October when they hit their lowest level (35%), but he is still in the dog house with as many people as there are who think well of his performance. As might be expected, Republicans give Mr. Bush good marks (69% positive), while Democrats rate him poorly (68%). The growing number of Independent voters in Arizona tip toward a negative assessment of Mr. Bush – 43 percent “poor” to 31 percent favorable.

Arizonans are generally positive regarding the President's supreme court appointments (41 percent favorable to 28 percent negative). Their views, however, are deeply partisan with seven of ten Republicans rating him favorably but six of ten Democrats give him poor marks for his appointments. Independent voters split 40 to 30 percent in favor of his Supreme Court appointments.

These favorable views have done little, however, to significantly lift voters' regard for the president's overall performance in the White House. Further, it appears that recent stumping by Mr. Bush's to counter criticism of the Iraq war has not helped his ratings. The proportion critical of his management of the situation in Iraq has grown throughout the year and now stands at its highest level – 48 percent. Additionally, his recent efforts to justify White House approval of federal government spying on Americans is drawing poor reviews: 44 percent rate his performance on safeguarding citizens' privacy as poor, and only 30 percent approve.

The deepest criticisms of the President, however, trace to dissatisfaction with deficit spending by the administration, little perceived progress on reducing health care costs for Americans and belief that the White House lacks a good exit strategy for Iraq. For each of these, 50 percent or more of Arizonans rate his performance as “poor” and less than three in ten think Mr. Bush is handling them well. In the case of deficit spending and health care costs controls, a fifth or less rate the president favorably.

The findings outlined in this report are based on a survey of 703 adults in Maricopa and Pima Counties conducted between January 5th and January 13th, 2006, by the Behavior Research Center of Arizona as part of the Center’s independent and non-partisan Rocky Mountain Poll series. The public is welcome to visit www.brcpolls.com to read this and other recent polls.

The study also registers growth in negative assessments of Mr. Bush for his efforts to improve the US balance of trade and strengthening of world opinion toward the United States. Modest improvement is registered however, on assuring the financial stability of the social security system although on balance, opinion is still tipped toward the negative (24 percent favorable to 43 unfavorable). It also appears that, even though there are widespread signs that the economy is improving, Mr. Bush is getting little credit for the recovery – by 34 to 39 percent, Arizonans rate his performance on the economy as “poor.”

Favorable regard for Mr. Bush is strongest among men and voters over 55 years of age (45%), high-income families (50%) and Caucasians (44%), but trails off among women (35%), lower-income families (26%) and middle-income families (33%).

In the overall sample, one may say with 95 percent certainty that the results have a statistical precision of plus or minus 3.7 percent of what they would have been had the entire adult population been surveyed.
